TINY, HAPPY, ACTIVE PEOPLE

IDEAS TO HELP YOUR CHILD DEVELOP THROUGH PLAY

By Tania swift

If you feel lost for ideas of what to do with your young child right now, or just feel stuck in a rut, then you are not alone.

Teachers, nursery practitioners, parents and anyone else who has had to keep a young child occupied for long periods of time have all hit a brick wall at some point or another. It happens to the best of us.

Over the years of working with children, parents and early years practitioners and teachers, I have compiled some sure-fire ideas and tricks to keep children occupied, happy and developing through movement and play.

Activities with your child will fall into two main camps:

Child-led Activities

Child-led play time is when a child is left to do what they choose: exploring, discovering, growing and developing through enjoyment - and they need ample time to do so. As a parent, your role in child-led play is to provide your child with a variety of enriching environments.

'What is an enriching environment?' you may ask. Put simply, it is any indoor or outdoor area that sparks a child's imagination, excitement, interest and delight, and motivates them to explore, move and try new things.

Adult-led Activities

Adult-led activities are important to allow you to spend meaningful time with your child, to introduce them to new things and experiences, and to teach them things that they may need help with (e.g. learning to skip). As parents and carers, you know your child best. You will already know what they enjoy and love, now all you need to do is build on what you already know with some of these top tips and ideas.

Enhancing Activities

Young children cannot focus for long periods of time and they lose interest quite quickly. Enhancing activities with the following will engage them for longer and make the activities more enjoyable.

Imagination and Interests

Any activity can be enhanced with a little imaginative magic. Instead of just jumping from rock to rock, your child could be frog leaping from lily pad to lily pad; instead of sitting in a box, they could be a racing car driver taking corners at 190 mph. Think about what they are interested in and bring that into the activities and games you are playing.

Active Stories and Big Nursery Rhymes

When it comes to children in the early years, always remember to keep them moving if you can - do not make them sit down. Young children need to be active for most of the day as they learn, develop and grow best when they are moving.

Quiet time reading and bedtime stories are wonderful for young children, however stories and nursery rhymes do not have to be confined to those times. You can create big, energetic moves for stories and rhymes you already know, or even better, your child can help you create the moves. Alternatively, you and your child can create your own stories, using their imagination and interests.

Animals and Nature

Children are close to nature and respond well to being in a natural environment and also to activities based on nature and animals. Simply acting out animal moves and sounds always creates excitement in a child, and there are so many to choose from. Yoga-based moves and stories are a favourite for most children.

Yoga was originally based on things in nature, such as a tree, snake, rock, etc., and children are able to imagine what they are imitating and trying to be. The best thing you can do for your child, and yourself, is to spend time in nature, however if you can't get outdoor, bring nature into the room you are in.

Find online yoga classes for children.

Music

Babies will move to music even before they are able to walk and most of us still feel that love as adults. Hence putting on music and moving in different ways is a great way to get children moving.

Play different styles of music such as classical, children's songs, chart music or your favourite music. Grab ribbons, balls, dolls or anything else you can find and move around, while moving the object you are holding along with you. If you have some bubble wrap, place it on a non-slip surface and dance on it to music. Most of us love a bubble popping noise. If you enjoy dancing, share the love of moving to music with your children, if you don't enjoy dancing, do it anyway.

Props

Props help children focus more and make activities more engaging.

Use a balloon (not blown up), some playdough or a piece of tinfoil and instead of your child following instructions, they can follow the prop. Stretch it vertically- children stand on their tippy toes and stretch up to the sky, stretch it horizontally- children stand with their feet wide apart and their arms stretched out to the side, scrunch into a ball- children crouch down into the smallest ball, blow up the balloon and let it go- children run around in different direction and then fall to the ground.

Musical Instrument Toy Props are a great way to get children to move in different ways but also learn to pay attention. Allocate different moves to different toy instruments - children should do that move each time you use that instrument.

Free and Easy Activities for Young Children

There are so many things you have around the house that can be turned into fun activities. Here are a few ideas that don't cost anything and are easy to do:

Newspaper Scrunch

- Get some old newspaper and crunch ½ sheets up to make each ball
- Pass the paper ball around waist passing the ball into the other hand behind your back and again at the front.
- Using boxes, plastic bowls etc. set up targets to throw the balls into.
- As your child gets better move them further away or make the containers smaller.

Balloon Keepy-uppy

- Blow up a balloon and tie it
- Keep the balloon up in the air by tapping it with hands. Encourage children to use both hands. Count the number completed and aim to beat your score.
- Use other body parts such as head, knees, feet, elbows etc.

Cup Catch

- Scrunch up some kitchen foil or paper to make a golf ball sized ball.
- Place the ball inside a plastic cup or beaker
- Throw the ball up out of the cup and see if you can catch in the cup again

Animal Magic

- Can your child move like animals? Ask them to:
 - Hop like a rabbit, creep like a spider, stretch like a cat, fly like a bird
 - What other animals can you be?

Scavenger Hunt in the Garden, Park, House (if you can't get out)

- Create a list of articles you can find in the park or garden (Find free printable scavenger hunts).
- If you can put pictures with the list, that is even better.
- Challenge your child to find objects on the list.
- For younger children, do the hunt together.
- You can also create a list for grocery shopping and potentially your child will not be so bored wandering around the aisles.

THE BIG GARDEN BIRDWATCH 2021

HOW TO GET YOUR CHILDREN INVOLVED

Each year, thousands of people across the UK participate in the RSPB's Big Garden Birdwatch.

The Big Bird Watch is an initiative where the public is invited to spend one hour watching and taking note of which birds appear in their garden, outside their window, or in their local park. They then send their results to the RSPB. These results are used to create an updated set of data that reveals insight into bird numbers across the UK.

This year's Birdwatch is coming up on January 29th-31st, and it's a perfect chance to make the most of a fun yet simple activity where your children can learn something new.

With the UK in its third national lockdown, it is getting trickier to find new ways to keep the family upbeat and positive. Therefore, the Big Garden Birdwatch is a fantastic opportunity - engaging with nature through a structured activity can help maintain physical and mental wellbeing, particularly in a time where outdoor trips are few and far between. Also, with almost half a million people getting involved in the Birdwatch every year, your children can feel connected to others through the shared experience of contributing to a nationwide project.

The RSPB's chief executive Becky Speight said, "We know that for many people, garden birds provide an important connection to the wider world and bring enormous joy."

"Lockdown brought few benefits, but the last year has either started or reignited a love of nature for many people. There has been a broad and much-needed realisation that nature is an important and necessary part of our lives especially for our mental health and wellbeing. But nature needs us too."

What are the benefits of getting children involved in the Big Garden Birdwatch?

Sean McMenemy, garden wildlife expert and Director of Ark Wildlife Ltd, spends a lot of time promoting the benefits of getting children to explore and interact with nature, having given presentations at many local schools.

An activity like birdwatching is such a great way to have fun with your children and could even inspire an interest in wildlife. Whether this entails stepping outside to watch the birds, or observing them through a window, the act of appreciating the surrounding wildlife is both a learning opportunity and a chance to have fun as a family.

On the benefits of getting involved in the Birdwatch, Sean says:

“Maintaining concentration while home or remote learning is difficult for younger children and their education can suffer. However, giving them permission to gaze out the window, or explore the garden is a great way to learn without them even realising it. Counting, recording, drawing, observing and identifying visiting birds are all valuable learning opportunities in a fun and exciting way.”

“Birds are very present in all our lives. Even children who say they ‘know nothing’ when asked, are surprised when questioned about common birds. Can you identify a duck? An owl? A Seagull?”

Once their minds are opened, they can often identify a dozen or more birds they didn't realise they knew. Eagle, goose, chicken, swan, penguin, turkey, parrot, robin. Maybe even blue tit, crow, kingfisher and blackbird. It's fun to show children how much they know without even realising it. It builds confidence and encourages children to engage further in the natural world.”

“Spending time watching or walking in nature has been shown to benefit both mind and body, and this is as true for young people as it is adults. Sitting quietly in fresh air or walking in open spaces calms the mind and body, it balances our physiology and promotes production of positive hormones.”

“Slowing to the pace of nature and it's natural rhythms is greatly beneficial and contrasts starkly with our fast paced digital existences with all its distractions. Time spent in nature is never wasted.”

How can you take part in the Big Garden Birdwatch with your children?

Taking part is simple - watch the birds in your garden with your children, and only count the birds that land, not those that fly over. Then, go onto the RSPB Birdwatch website and submit the highest number of each bird species you observed at any one time.

Here are a few tips that will make the Big Garden Birdwatch as fun and educational as possible for your kids:

Print out some visual prompts.

Having images to hand of what birds to look out for (which can be found on this RSPB resource) will help your children feel confident in spotting the correct creatures.

Remain patient

When birdwatching, birds may not necessarily appear straight away, so it is important to encourage your children to make the most of all the beautiful sights and sounds that can be experienced in nature. Can they spot any other animals? Which is their favourite plant?

Use your ears as much as your eyes

The sound of birds calling or singing can be just as beautiful as the sight of the bird, and can help relieve stress. If looking through a window from indoors makes it difficult to hear sounds, you could even try playing bird songs from a phone or laptop to elevate the experience for your kids!

Use sunflower seeds to attract more birds

Spreading sunflower seeds for birds (shells removed) out onto your outdoor space can have a big impact on the number and diversity of birds that are attracted to the area. So if there seems to be a lack of birds around your home, this tip could create a more exciting birdwatch experience!

You can be flexible with timing

Although the official event asks the public to watch for one hour on a specific weekend, do not be afraid to do whatever suits you. Some children may be excited to take part straight away, and some others may take some time to build enthusiasm.

HOW TO BUILD A TIME CAPSULE WITH YOUR CHILDREN

Now that we're spending more time at home with the kids as a result of the pandemic, we're all looking for new ideas of things to do.

Here, Kirsty Pranker, Managing Director at Write From The Heart shares her top five tips for building a time capsule with the kids that will document the historical events you're all living through.

The pandemic has interrupted almost all aspects of our normal lives, but one positive to come from it is the amount of time it has given families to spend together.

With extra-curricular activities off the cards for the kids, and trips to the gym or meals out no longer permitted, you may be looking for other ways to occupy your afternoons and weekends. So, why not get creative and organise a family project that you can all get hands on with?

While scrapbooks and arts and crafts are both great activities for getting the creative juices flowing, putting together a time capsule will be a particularly exciting project for the kids. As well as boosting their happiness and mindfulness, it will also help you leave some of your favourite memories for someone else to discover — or for you to dig up in future. Here, I will be sharing my top five tips for creating a great family time capsule with your children.

Why make a time capsule?

A time capsule is a great opportunity to group together some of your family's favourite memories, whether that's in the form of pictures, letters, or anything else that you think you'll enjoy reflecting on. In fact, a study published in the Personality and Social Psychology bulletin describes how looking back on happier times can boost your mood, as well as your social connectedness, and can reinforce the meaning of life, which may be particularly important while the global pandemic is disrupting things.

Although nostalgia is based on past experiences and memories, recalling these can help motivate and inspire you, as well as helping you stay optimistic about the future. This may help both you and your children figure out what you would like to do more of and can even give you some ideas of what to do once the pandemic is over.

As well as encouraging you to reflect on the past and look forward to the future, creating the time capsule will be a fun activity for you to all get involved in. Discussing the things you're adding will no doubt strengthen the bond between you and your children, and seeing what they choose themselves will show what they value in their lives. It can also take temporarily distract you all from any anxiety you may be having around the current pandemic, instead letting you get engrossed in your own dream world of memories.

Planning your time capsule

The first thing you'll need when making your time capsule is a container to hold all the personal belongings you want to include in it. This should be something strong that won't get damaged easily or biodegrade when buried, but the material you choose will also depend on how long you'll wait to dig it up, or if you're leaving it to be found by someone else. For example, if you want to leave your capsule for later generations to discover, you will want to choose something metal-based, such as aluminium or stainless steel.

In all cases, I'd recommend avoiding plastic containers as these can easily get destroyed by the elements or by wildlife that live in the soil. Whatever you choose for your time capsule container, you'll need to make sure it has a strong seal which keeps it closed while buried.

Once you've decided on the vessel, you'll then want to consider how many items you'll be able to fill it with, and whether the items need to be a little smaller or can be a bit bigger. You'll then be able to help your children pick appropriate pieces to fill your time capsule with.

What to include

Your time capsule should be completely personal to your family, so there are no hard and fast rules about what to include in it. However, here are some ideas to get you thinking:

- Photographs of your favourite memories together. Remember to date these, so you (or the finders) can see exactly when they were taken.
- Letters to your future self. If your children are already learning how to write, this can help them to put their skills into practice. Even if your kids are too young to write, you can construct a letter on their behalf from your old family to your future selves, or to whoever digs up your capsule.
- Newspaper clippings from the exact day you intend to bury your time capsule.
- A note to whoever finds your time capsule if you aren't planning on digging it up yourselves.
- Currency.
- A price list of everyday items like milk, bread, and other essentials to see how they change over time.

To keep your time capsule simple and accessible to anybody who uncovers it, you'll want to make sure you avoid putting anything in that would require technology or anything other than your hand to open it, or your eye to interpret what it is. You might also want to consider adding a contents list of everything that goes into your capsule. This is a great opportunity to have your kids practise their handwriting and spelling and will ensure people know what to expect inside it when they uncover it.

Burying your time capsule

Once you've loaded your time capsule with all the items you wish to add, it's time to bury your capsule! Finding a location for it will be great fun for the whole family, but you may firstly want to consider how long you'll be burying it for and whether you want to dig it up together later or you intend for someone else to find it.

If you just want to leave it a couple of years until your child is old enough to properly reflect on their younger life, then you could consider burying it in your own garden. Just make sure you mark down the place where you've hidden it and keep this information safe until it's time to have your kids unearth it.

If you're leaving it for someone else to find, your garden is still a good option, especially if you think you'll move out in future. Focus on finding a spot near where you think people may dig, such as around a pond or some soil which could make up future flower beds. This will make it more likely for people to come across it, and to discover what your life was like in the past.

Set clues for finding your time capsule

You won't want to forget your time capsule exists as the years go by, so it's important that you make sure a handful of trusted people are aware of your open date, if you're planning on uncovering it as a family. You could maybe add a note to the end of your calendar each year to remind you to carry over the message into the following year until you're ready to find your capsule again.

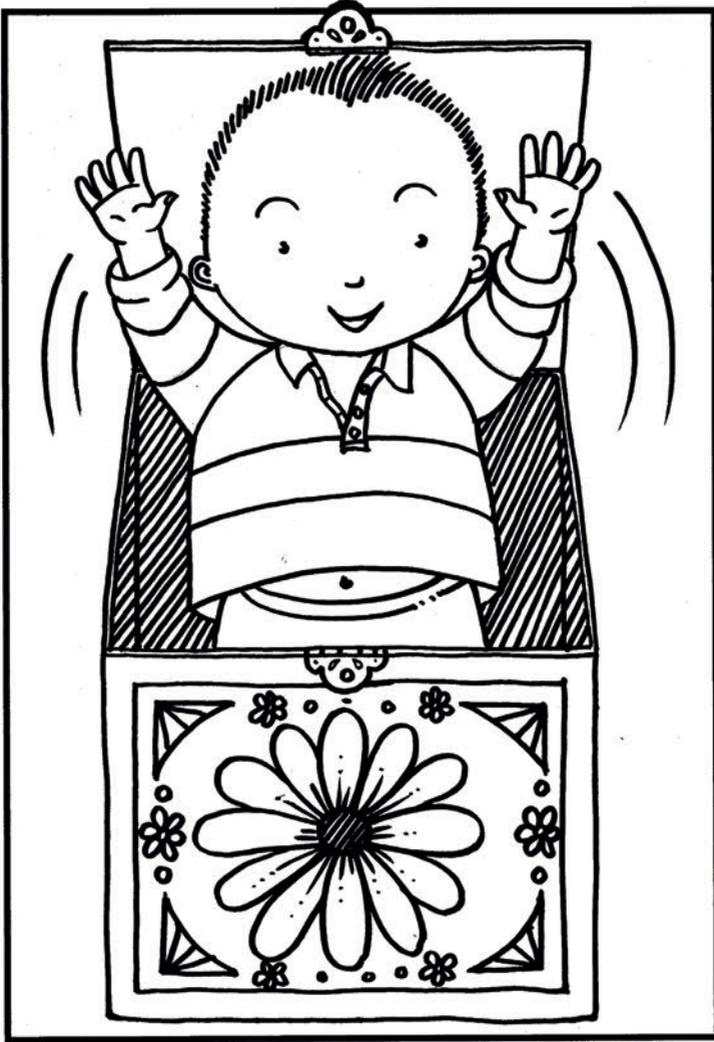

If you're leaving your capsule for somebody in the future to uncover, you'll want to note down the coordinates and leave a few hints as to where it is over time. This is sure to get your community interested and on the hunt for your time capsule which is sure to bring people together.

Building a time capsule is a great project for the whole family, especially with the current pandemic giving us so much history to look back on. Follow my top tips for planning, creating, and burying your capsule that the kids will love getting involved with.

Article written by Kirsty Pranker, Managing Director at Write From The Heart.

Set up in Kirsty's newborn's bedroom with her sister Jen, the pair had just £300 start-up capital between them to start their business. Within months of launching their personalised and remembrance keepsakes on Facebook, both Jen and Kirsty left their full-time jobs to focus on the new venture. They believe that their drive and determination, as well as their strong family bond has been the key to their success
